Details

Securistyle have contributed to the architectural success of a landmark building within the capital's business district, More London. More London is a 13-acre Foster and Partners-designed development situated between London Bridge and Tower Bridge.

The Rushmore hinge is especially suitable for large commercial buildings due to its effective smoke egress. The bottom opening vents allow trapped smoke to flow quickly out of the building, a useful safety feature on any large construction.

Securistyle director, David Walsh says "More London is a driving force in the dynamic regeneration of the South Bank and Southward, and is being viewed as an architectural and economic success. With the specification of the Rushmore hinge within part of the development, we have taken the lead and provided the right solutions for innovative architects and building designers involved in this construction. This effectively allows the creation of buildings which feature opening vents on a larger scale than ever before."
